Bullying Can Begin in Preschool

Some studies show that as many as 20% of four year olds have experienced some sort of bullying from their peers, and that about 15% of children show bullying behavior. Sometimes it's hard to tell normal developmental behavior from bullying. Recognizing the signs and intervening at an early age can change these behaviors and help children gain the social and self-regulating skills they need for life.

Supporting Young Introverts

Classrooms by nature, are designed for extroverted children. Introverts have to work harder to be comfortable in larger groups of people and in new situations, but there are many simple ways to support your introverted children. Learn how introverts see and experience the world and discover a handful of tips and tricks for helping young introverts thrive.

Expanding Children's Thinking

We as adults sometimes get so caught up in the way we always do things that we have difficulty expanding our horizons. We teach children in the way we are most comfortable, but we want our children to learn how to learn. To do that, we have to teach them to question, research and explore their world. We'll explore several questions that will help unleash each child's potential.
